Archaeology research project at an Ancient Roman villa

The villa was first discovered in the 1920s and was turned into a tourist attraction.

In 1957, the site was reburied, but now an archaeological trust is re-examining it.

As a result of ongoing {{blank:1}}, the villa is at risk of destruction.

The number of rooms in the villa devoted to {{blank:2}} was exceptionally high.

In 1924, a {{blank:3}} was built over the mosaic to protect it.

The part of the mosaic that is in better condition than expected is the {{blank:4}}.

Finding {{blank:5}} at the villa confirmed that the occupant was an important member of society.

Plans are in place to allow {{blank:6}} to view the mosaic before it is reburied.

Excavators in the 1920s failed to identify the existence of buildings constructed of {{blank:7}}.
